Lead the first B-17 bombing raids over Nazi Europe.

In October 1942, when the U.S. first launched its daylight bombing raids against Hitler, it was the men of the 306th Bombardment Group in the lead. Now, First Over Germany allows you to join these courageous fliers on 25 real-life combat missions over the death-filled skies of Nazi Europe. As you strap yourself into the pilot's seat, you can't help but wonder: "How many missions can I survive?"

Practice taking off and landing in your first training assignment.

Hand pick your ten crew members to fly your very own B-17 Flying Fortress. Start out flying training missions in Utah to raise your crew's efficiency and experience.

Next, fly your B-17 to Thurleigh, England where you become group leader of the 306th BG.

This user-friendly flight simulator gives you the feel of flying a real B-17. You and your crew must deal with flak, mechanical/engine failures, fuel usage, bailing out, and falling out of formation. You engage enemy fighters in realistic animated combat.

You are judged by your bombing accuracy. With each successful mission, your crew's efficiency rises — along with your rank.

Survive all 25 missions, and we'll salute you as General!

A view from your navigator's seat as a German fighter closes in.

Your crew status shows aptitude, experience and health points.

A companion disk will soon be available for First Over Germany. This disk will feature 25 more authentic missions that took place after the October 14, 1943 Schweinfurt raid. You will be given a B 17-G to fly with your old crew. The missions have been selected by Russell A. Strong (now the Secretary of the 306th Bombardment Group Association, and the author of the book "First Over Germany"). A companion article, written by Russell A. Strong, will accompany the disk. These new missions are not milk runs, and will include more flak, jets, rockets and very long flights. Some pilots completed 50 missions, can you?
